Although sculptures of human and animal torsos are strictly speaking not part of Lewis's UNTAMED series, they remain a significant focus in his wider body of work, their themes of disconnection and fragmentary states continuing to draw him time and again.

*Please note that these/this item/s are/is under Temporary Admission and subject to 5% import VAT on the sale price.

These works belong to a transitional group of images created by Lewis as he started to experiment with the human form. Compared to later works in the UNTAMED series, their textures are more subtle and muted.

UNTAMED in Berkeley Square

Mature trees cast filtered light over an installation of five large sculptures from the UNTAMED series in Berkeley Square, London, running from September to December 2013. The protective intimacy of the site, not unlike that of a woodland glen, beautifully enhances the primal energies and pagan sensibilities of Dylan's work, while the backdrop of a rumbling city heightens his messages on the modern human condition. <http://www.untamedinberkeleysquare.co.uk/>
